WORDS FROM THE CHAIR

Alain CADEC
Chair of Committee on Fisheries

Dear Colleagues,

Dear Friends,

On Monday 9 October, our Committee will organise a public hearing on super-trawlers. With quite a provocative title, “destructive or sustainable”, the idea is to get to know better this segment of the fishing fleet and to understand its way of working. The objective of the Common Fisheries Policy is to make fisheries sustainable for all fleets, whether artisan or industrial, in order to reach the maximum sustainable yield possible. Therefore, it is not a question of vessel size but of fishing technique. We have to pay attention not to direct one part of the fleet against the other, artisan against industrial fisheries: both have to respect the rules and both play an important role in the supply of EU consumers with quality fish and seafood products.

Member States play an essential role in ensuring a sustainable distribution of quotas between the different fleets. I recall that Article 17 of the Common Fisheries Policy requires the fisheries policy to take into account the environmental impact and its contribution to the local economy and the catch volume. Furthermore, they have to offer incentives to those fishing vessels that have selective engines or make use of certain techniques that have a low impact on the environment, such as a low fuel consumption and minimal damages to the marine habitat. On the other hand, the European Maritime and Fisheries Fund supports important investments in sustainability, selectivity and competitiveness of fishing vessels. We will ask the invited experts to enlighten us on these issues.

Alain CADEC
